Detailed description of your personality

John Smith, you demonstrate an ability to balance the need to carve out moments all to yourself with the need to socialize. You are therefore not a gregarious person but neither are you a lone wolf. Nevertheless, from the rational point of view you lean toward simplification and speed: in short, you prefer to act rather than get lost in unnecessary reflection. Regarding the management of emotions it must be reported that self-control is not your strong suit. You experience emotions with intensity and struggle to keep them at bay. Perfectionism is not among your main personality traits; let's say you usually put in the good will, but then you tend to get discouraged easily. Then there is your lack of vitality, although at times you also feel the need to act and be active, yes, but with much restraint.

At the same time, a deep drive toward introversion shines through, which makes you an introspective individual interested essentially in your own inner world. In consciential terms you could be called an awakened one! You are always well present and aware of your actions, never shallow and reckless. Now let's examine your sensitive trait. The answers provided highlight an empathetic and compassionate attitude, attentive to the feeling of others and therefore not always easy to handle. The area of sensitivity leads us to that of tolerance, and in this area you make yourself exaggeratedly helpful and open toward others, making forgiveness a kind of passkey. The creative sphere is present, but not particularly developed. Let's say it ranks average, so you may not be an artist, but you can't even be called an ordinary person. In the area of naiveté, however, you show that you believe everything and are also easily fooled. Your trust in people and in the world allows you to find good everywhere. However, it must be said that you encounter difficulties when you have to rely on your personal abilities, thus manifesting a limited degree of personal security and a tendency toward submission. After self-confidence you need to deal with autonomy. You are averagely gifted in this area, so you can make do when there really is no alternative, even though you do not disdain outside help. The eternal struggle between materialism and spirituality is resolved in favor of the matter: the transcendent has little hold on you and you definitely prefer the tangible over the ethereal. The spiritual sphere accompanies us toward that of irony, since laughing is indeed good for the soul. In your case we find a fair balance between seriousness and irony, in fact you can appreciate witty jokes as long as they do not cross the line of decency. There are also healthy forms of selfishness, however in your case it is selfishness for its own sake, brutal at times and generally uninterested in the fate of others. In conclusion we would like to point out to you that you are still quite young and that your psychological profile will continue to refine over time even giving you some surprises.
