Distinctive traits: Depth, Morality, Firmness

John Smith, this level of awareness stands above the rational as well as the statistical average; which means two things:

1) You possess an uncommon depth of mind;

2) Your rational part coexists with an idealistic outlook on life.

Now, it is very likely that your solid moral grounding and your rational mind will have a fight from time to time, nonetheless when faced with the possibility of choosing between what is most logical and convenient, and between what is right, 2 out of 3 times your decision falls on what you think is right. In fact, you cannot always make rationality and righteousness go together, but then again, that is the way the world works, sometimes it seems to be sensible and fair, other times it seems to go out of its way to create division and partiality. Isn't it so?

You are aware that justice and truth do not always triumph, but if you can, you stay away from those morally degrading compromises that are so appealing to the most superficial and selfish people. You are not selfish but, we would rather say, firm on your positions and disinclined to reason according to mere self-interest. You still think in a dualistic way, that is, in terms of good and evil, right and wrong, etc., although your hyperuranic view of existence places you somewhere between the immanent and the transcendent.

That said, yours is an enviable position from a consciousness perspective, but we still glimpse many evolutionary outlets. The next stage of awareness, which we call soul-level, expands the moral worldview toward an ethical-spiritual perspective, where good and evil are no longer so sharply distinguished from each other, but become two sides of the same coin.

All right, wishing you well on your way to infinity, we would like to suggest you to try our Mental Age Test, which would be nothing less than a more hilarious and less serious version of this test. Here it is:
